

I believe it is inaccurate to count prison inmates as residents of the community where the prison is located. The prison towns that support many of the prisons should not be given undue power by means of artificially increasing their populations by counting prisoners. This skews the apportionment of House of Representative seats so that tiny communities are over-represented.

Cynthia Campbell